Approved Club For Growers Of Leaf Retained

An "approved practices club" for Virginia quality-minded flue-cured tobacco growers will be sponsored again this year by the Virginia Farm Bureau, despite a disappointing first-year experiment with it in 1963.

One reason for continuing the club, S. T. Moore Jr., of South Hill, said yesterday is the backing of the Tobacco Association of the United States (TAUS), an organization with membership representing most of the country's major tobacco buying companies.

Chairman of the Farm Bureau's Tobacco Committee said he believes enough farmers will join to make it worthwhile "but we realize last year's experiment may make it harder."

In promising its support, TAUS called the first-year results "not true indications of the worth of the plan because of the weather and other conditions over which the growers had no control."

Hiram Zigler, Farm Bureau information director, agreed with this. "We couldn't possibly have picked a worse year," he said.

Begun last year in answer to buyer demands for better quality tobacco, the approved practices club is open to farmers who agree to follow certain growing practices acceptable to the trade.

In return, grower members are given an identification trademark for use on their tobacco on auction warehouse floor where it will be seen by buyers.

Club members must agree not to use maleic hydrazide, controversial sucker-control chemical that buring companies contend hurts tobacco quality.

Zigler said laboratory analyses were made on about 10 per cent of the tobacco grown under the club's auspices last year "and not a single sample showed a trace of maleic hydrazide."

About 4,000 acres were grown by members of the club last year, Moore said, but this leaf "didn't get too much recognition from buyers on the warehouse floor" because of a "communications breakdown" between top company officials and buyers he said.

Questions Of The Week?

(Editor's note: Here are some questions asked by Virginia farmers during the past week, as reported by county agricultural agents. Staff members of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute Agricultural Extension Service and or Experiment Station supply the answers.)

Q—What is the price outlook for hogs in 1964?

A—All indications are that 1964 hog prices will be a little higher than in 1963. They should reach $19.50 to $20 per cwt. by July and then the normal seasonal decline can be expected.

Q—What kind of equipment is needed to apply atrazine on corn land?

A—Conventional spray equipment is used. On sod land (for no plow planting) use a boom type sprayer, apply atrazine 1 to 5 weeks before planting at the rate of 5 to 6 pounds per acre. If planting in the conventional manner or by the plowplant method, use a boom type sprayer and apply material at 2 pounds per acre. Application can be made in a separate operation, or it can be made from a sprayer mounted on back of planter at time of planting. A third method is to mix atrazine with fertilizer solution at the rate of 2 pounds per acre. Application should be made within 10 days after planting. Check with your county agent for additional details.

Q—How do you control chickweed in alfalfa? Are there any new methods except chloro IPC?

A—There are no new methods. Chloro IPC is still recommended, applied when alfalfa is dormant.

Q—Are soybeans that I held for sale going to advance in price?

A—It was thought at one time that soybeans would go as high as $3 this year, but they are now at $2.60 and not expected to get much higher than this. Further rises will probably do no more than pay storage costs.

Q—Will the so-called silage varieties of corn produce more tonnage of silage per acre than grain varieties?

A—There are no varieties specifically recommended for silage. However, there is a tendency for farmers to use the medium - maturing varieties which do produce higher quality silage.

Q—Why do cattle and sheep not like good quality second cutting red clover hay alone or mixed with orchard grass? Does the second cutting have as much feeding value as the first?

A—The problem of animals refusing the second cutting of red clover hay is an unsolved problem. Fortunately, it doesn't occur very often. Apparently an occasional second cutting will cause an unusual amount of saliva. It is not a problem that's likely to stay with you. The second cutting is high in feeding value.

Q—Can I seed orchard grass in February with a cyclone seed sower and expect a good stand?

A—If you will partially prepare the seedbed.

Q—Western lumber is cutting into our pine lumber market. Is planting pine now considered a good investment?

A—Southern pine is thought to be a commodity with a good future. Go ahead and plant.

Payments Stop On Calf Vaccination For Brucellosis

The state-federal payment of fees for calf vaccination in the brucellosis program was discontinued effective Saturday, Feb. 15.

The announcement was made by Dr. George B. Estes, assistant state veterinarian of the Virginia Department of Agriculture, and Dr. E. C. Roskamp, USDA veterinarian in charge in Virginia.

This measure was taken for budgetary reasons to conserve limited state and federal brucellosis eradication funds. Vaccine will continue to be furnished at no cost, but livestock owners will now pay the attending veterinarians for their services.

The VDA urged livestock owners to continue the vaccination program and pointed out that the small cost of vaccination paid large dividends for the investment.

Calves may be officially vaccinated against brucellosis between the ages of eight months of age. However, the preferred and most ideal age was between four and six months.

Weekly Weather - Crop Report

Brisk winds with wet and cold days made the week of February 15 to 24 an unpleasant week for most outdoor activities, the current Virginia Crop Reporting Service summary states.

Temperatures averaged below normal for the second consecutive week, averaging one to seven degrees lower than the normal for the period. Precipitation occurred mostly as snow of the western portion with in the northern third of the state and the higher elevations mostly rain in the central and southern portions.

Melted amounts averaged around one and one-half inches.

CROP AND FARM WORK.

Snow cover and wet soils held field work to practically a standstill throughout the Old Dominion for the week. Feeding and caring for livestock and routine chores were the major activities on most farms.

With snow and low temperatures, newborn animals required more attention than usual. Pruning made limited progress in orchard areas. Many farmers were repairing machinery and buildings and cutting pulpwood and firewood, as weather permitted.

Very little forage was secured from grazing.

FARM PRICE OUTLOOK

(This is the way prospects for Virginia farm prices looked to the Virginia Department of Agriculture on Friday. The Department offers it to farmers with the warning that no one can predict prices and be right all the time.)

HAY

An ample supply of out-of-state hay in all classes and kinds is reported by shippers. Periods of adverse winter weather, however, could cause delays in shipments from some areas during the next few weeks.

Keep in mind that rate reduction on hay being shipped into Virginia drought disaster counties will end on April 30, 1964. Plan to order the hay you will need after this date so that it will be in transit prior to the expiration date.

Last week prices per ton for hay being offered by shippers to Virginia hay dealers and feed manufacturers were: first cutting alfalfa and alfalfa mixes $44.00-$47.00; second cutting alfalfa and alfalfa mixes $51.00-$54.00; clover and clover-timothy, timothy-clover $41.00 - $47.00; and timothy $43.00-$45.00.

These prices are for hay coparted on rail at U. S. No. 2 or better, pickup baled, shipped by rail to points in Virginia drought disaster designed counties.

LAMBS

The outlook for the lamb market this year is unusually good.

Seasonally, lamb prices should move up to a peak in late May or June.

Current prices of lambs are running $2.00 - $3.00 above a year ago. Usually lamb price experience only a moderate upward trend at the start of the year, but 1964 prices have shown a sharp rise. Chicago prices of choice lambs have increased from the $18.50 - $19.00 level in the October-December period to $20.00 - $21.00 plus by the third week of February.

A shorter anticipated supply this year should result in further gains from present prices.

Based on January 1 inventory numbers of ewes one year old and over, the U. S. 1964 lamb crop should be about 4.5 per cent less than the 1963 crop.

In Virginia a 3-4 per cent reduction is probable for the 1964 lamb crop compared with last year. For states competing with Virginia indications are that there will be 8-10 per cent fewer lambs this year than in 1963. Sharp reductions in ewes in Kentucky and Tennessee were shown in the January 1 inventory.

Many Forms Of Insecticides Are Available, Says County Agent

Insecticides come in many different formulations. And this is important to their use, Jim Smith county agent in Appomattox county, has listed the main forms of insecticides which are available.

Dusts are dry powders ready for use. The chemical content of dusts may vary from one-half to 20 per cent. Dusts don't mix with water and should never be used as sprays.

Wettable powders are designed to be used as sprays. Powders may contain from 15 to 85 per cent chemical. Powders usually contain a wetting agent which permits them to form a suspension in water. They can be used on vegetation without damage. Wettable powders are designed to be used as sprays. Powders may contain from 15 to 85 per cent chemical ingredient. Powders contain a wetting agent which permits them to form a suspension in water. They can be used on vegetation without damage. High volume hydraulic sprayers with mechanical agitators are best suited for applying wettable powders.

Soluble powders are chemicals that readily dissolve in water. They can be applied with low pressure, low-volume sprayers.

Emulsifiable concentrates are liquids carrying the insecticide in a suitable solvent and emulsifier. The label on the container designates the weight of active chemical per gallon. Emulsions can be applied with a low pressure, low - volume sprayer. Be sure to use only on the crops listed on the label because emulsions are harmful to some plants.

Oil solutions are ready for use, and contain one-half to 10 per cent active ingredients.

Granulated materials are ready-to-use insecticides in or on particles of a carrier. Granules are useful for controlling soil insects because they last longer than other formulations. Granules can be applied with fertilizer spreaders, seeders, or special granule applicators.

Aerosols and spray bombs contain one or more insecticides, an oil solvent, and a porpellant gas. The bombs produce a fine mist or a coarse spray. Fine mists (aerosols) are used to control flying insects, such as flies and mosquitoes in a closed area. Coarse spray bombs can be used on crops and animals to check the labels carefully before using.

In addition to these seven forms, there are several special types of formulations. Baits, insecticide-fertilizer mixtures, insecticide-herbicide mixtures, and mothproofing agents are a few of these special types.

Peery emphasizes that directions for use of insecticides must be followed closely as to dosage, time of application, crops or livestock to be treated, waiting periods between treatment and harvest, and other limitations as stated on the label. Insecticides are essential but they can be hazardous if used carelessly.

The NATIONAL OUTLOOK

The President's message on housing provides an illustration of how government programs, once started, tend to grow the proliferate. In the attempt to solve one set of problems by government intervention we create new problems which call for new measures of government intervention — and so on forever.

The low-rent public housing program may appear on its surface to have been a great success. The newly - constructed buildings certainly look better and more comfortable than the structures torn down to make room for them. But in the process more dwelling units were destroyed than were built. Thus on net the average crowding has been intensified and many families were forced back into existing slums.

In addition, maximum-income limitations necessarily imposed on families to qualify for subsidized housing have created social problems. There is a high concentration of broken families in these projects, which increases the difficulty of dealing with juvenile delinquency and maintaining discipline in the schools.

The logical reaction would have been a pause for reevaluation. Instead we have added federal subsidies to middle-income housing. This year, the President suggests the development of whole communities, "complete with all public services, all the industry and commerce needed to provide jobs, and sufficient housing and cultural and recreational facilities for moderate—and low—income families as well as for the well-to-do."

There is no price tag attached to this part of the Presidents program. This is because it involves a variety of federal as sistance techniques: grants and loans to the states and local for planning and construction public facilities, and of loan guarantees for private developers constructing such facilities.

The rationale for this program is that urban expansion has been "unplanned and haphazard." It is hard to see virtue—economic, social or cultural—of a deliberate attempt to create new communities. Who will decide: where specific industries and businesses belong? Who will work in them? What recreational and cultural facilities people will want, or have?

These questions have actually been anticipated in the President's message. The answer is that federal funds be used to train the social workers and other local employees needed for solving community problems. The President says that the "substantial Federal investment in local expenditures justifies a deep Federal interest in the quality of these programs."

In other words we will use federal money to develop the people who will solve the problems we will create by federal planning of communities.

Chairman Reviews Year

Virginia Civil War Centennial Observance At Half-Way Point

The five-year Civil War Centennial in Virginia has passed its half-way mark and interest is continuing strong, according to the Virginia Civil War Commission.

In a year-end statement, John Warren Cooke, executive chairman, reported that attendance at the Civil War Centennial Center in 1963 will almost exactly equal the 156,602 for last year. Visitors since the building opened 27 months ago have exceeded 339,000.

This past year the Commission put greater emphasis on education and travel without any lessening of its commemorative role.

Many additions and improvements were made to the Center, Cooke said. Most significant was the addition of a special "Travel Information" desk was added and helpful lessees attendants of historic and recreational attractions.

Animation was added to several of the Center's exhibits to make them more interesting and educational, especially for children. During 1963 close to 800 organized school groups visited the Center for a total of over 28,000 students and teachers.

The Commission's new education program in 1963 included publication of additional teaching aids, notably a "cutout" sheet which was given to some 25,000 children. This sheet, measuring 18 x 24 inches, shows leaders and flags of both sides, as well as pictures of cannon, ships, battle scenes and famous buildings. Printed on one side, the cutout is ideal for clipping pasting in scrapbooks and coloring.

Education Stressed

An important educational effort by the Commission in 1963 was the production, in cooperation with the State Department of Education, of a 27-minute film entitled "Stonewall Jackson's Way."

This film, released in June, was immediately in heavy demand. It was used by 17 television stations in six states plus the District of Columbia. The film also has been requested for private showings by over 100 groups throughout the nation, including Alaska, and by two groups in England.

The Commission donated ten prints of the film to Virginia's public schools, which borrow them through the State's five regional bureaus of teaching materials. Many other schools have borrowed prints directly from the Commission.

Sales of "Iron Gate to the Confederacy," the Commission's official account of the Civil War in Virginia, continued strong in 1963. The illustrated 64-page booklet was reprinted toward the close of the year. All new sales include a sheet of questions and classroom discussion topics as a help to history teachers.

Jackson Year

Because 1963 was the centennial of Jackson's greatest hour, at Chancellorsville, and his accidental wounding and death, many commemorative events centered around him. On May 1 the Commission and the United Daughters of the Confederacy sponsored a dinner in Richmond that was attended by Governor Harrison and more than 200 other Jackson admirers.

The Commission sponsored a ceremony to rededicate the Virginia statue at Gettysburg on July 2, the centennial anniversary of the tragic three-day battle there. A feature of the program was the presence of 90-year-old P. William Stevers, sculptor of the statue which was first dedicated in 1917.

More than 2,000 participants and spectators took part in a Civil War Day program at the Centennial Center on June 14, the second consecutive such program sponsored by the Commission and the Virginia Army and Air National Guard.

Other commemorative events in 1963 included dedication of a new visitors' center at Chancellorsville on May 5; a parade at Virginia Military Institute on May 16 to mark the centennial of Jackson's death, and re-enactment of the legendary 45-mile ride by Molly Tynes to warn residents of Wytheville of approaching Federals.
